THE subject of Coroners' Juries having recently attracted attention, an extract which we give further on from the Law Times may be of some interest. It does not touch upon the point immediately under discussion here, but it calls attention to some matters of importance in connection with Coroners' Juries, which it will be desirable to take into consideration, should steps be adopted for the improvement of the existing system.

an opinion has already been expressed against it: and there is a further reason suggested by the article under notice. The employment of a Jury gives to Coroners' Inquests a species of importance which they ought not to possess in the eyes of the public. They become in fact a species of legal proceeding in themselves, instead of merely preliminaries to legal proceedings which ought in strictness to be considered to commence at the Magistrate's claim for the $50 reward for finding the body Court. The Coroner sums up, expounds the masters of sampans Nos. 4,399 and 1,332 aplaw, and the Jury find a verdict-proceedings peared to spose, and produced a considerable which are very apt indeed to raise a certain amount of evidence, with a view to showing case, the public being not always possessed appear to have made two assertions, one; that what he had done to enable the man to S.W. and fine. WHAT IS'A COMMANDER-IN CHIEF? The question, "What is a Commander-in-Chief?" appears, says the Broad Arrow, to agitate the minds of many of our correspondents from time to time, and especially do they seem to be concerned as to when and how the Duke of Cambridge was deprived of the title. and became the "commanding" instead of the ON NEW YORK .commander. The fact is, that His Royal Highness never was Commander-in-Chief. The Duke of Wellington was the last Commanderin-Chief of the British Army, and he was appointed by letters patent. These is a vast difference in pay and allowances between a Commander-in-Chief and an officer Commanding-in-Chief. The Duke of Cambridge is General Commanding-in-Chief, so was Lord Hill. His Royal Highness's position is that of Field Marshal on the Staff, but we think he only draws pay and allowances as a general."

MOR comprchensiveness and practical service D this Work stands unrivalled. All the new words which the Chinese have of late years been compelled to coin to express the numerous ob jects in machinery, photography, telegraphy, and in science generally, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon them, are here given in extenso. Each and every word is fully illustrated and explained, forming exercises for students of a most instructive nature Both the Court and Punti pronunciations are given, the accents being carefully marked on the best principle hitherto attained. The typography displays the success of an attempt to make the Chinese and English type correspond in the size of body, thereby effecting a vast conomy of space, achieving a clearness not previously attained, and dispensing with those vast margins and vacant spaces which have eretofore characterized Chinese publications. To illustrate the vast scope of the work, the following facts are submitted for consideration. Chalmers' Vocabularly contains about 16,000 Chinese characters, and Medburst's English and Chinese Dictionary about 100,000, whilst Press Office, or to the following Agents:this work contains more than 50,000 English Macao Messra. J. P. .. THE TIDES AT ST. MALO.

When the water is low, this small seaport town appears surrounded on all sides by fantastically shaped cliffs, covered with scawceds and barnacles. Pools of salt water interspersed here and there among the hollowed stones, or on the even ground between them, and harbouring many curious varieties of marine animals, are the only visible signs of the vicinity of the ocean, whose hoarse murmurs are heard resounding from afar. But an astonishing change takes place a few hours after, when the town, surrounded by the sea, would be a complete island, but for a long, narrow causeway called "the Sillon," which connects it with the mainland. the side fronting the open sea, the tide breaks with tremendous rage against the strong battresses that have been raised to oppose its fury, rises foamingly to a height of thirty or forty feet, and threatens the tardy wandered as he loiters on the narrow causeway. The cliffs that erewhite were seen to surround the town are now hidden, under the waters, some few excepted, that raise-their rugged heads like minute islands above the circumambient floods. The opposite side of the causeway is also washed by the sea : - but heroits motions are less tumultuous, for, after having broken against numberless rocks and of its primitive strength. On this side lies the vast, but deserted harbour of St. Malo, completely dry at cob tide; a wide sea during the flood .- The Sea and its Living Wonders. By Dr. Hartwig.

ON GETTING MARRIED. Why I should take pen in hand to perpetrate an article on "getting married" when much about it, may surprise those of my I'll teach you to humbug your betters! with bitter irony, "the happy state," which intention to humbug him as the child un-My treatment of the subject may, therefore, know, in England, too, at that period. -- From "Realities of Irish Life." herelied on as being absolutely impartial; and, if I may lean just a little towards the side of my own sex, I am perfectly justified indoing so, as I have never been "retained' by the other side. I have never been able to satisfactorily settle in my own mind whether getting married is supposed to be a subject for rejoicing or mourning. Certainly, all the weddings I have seen would go to provethe latter. The bride has always been in tears—the bridegroom has always looked profoundly miserable. She seems to be making the best of a bad job, and he seems to be hoping that some one will charitably step forward and stop the ceremony at the point where the officiating clergyman asks if anyone knows "any just cause or impediment, &c. There is one theory I wish to advance with regard to the bridegroom, and that is, that he has never paid for his wedding garments when he enters the church; he seems in constant fear lest his tailor should be at hand with his "little bill." Observe the way in which he sneaks from the hired carriage which generally has an appropriately fullerent appearance—and giances furtively round! See how ill at ease he seems in these ummaid-for specimens of the tailor's artwhat a sickly hue is reflected on his sorrowful countenance by his lavender tie. Gentle reader, or fair reader, or you, sir, who have passed through the ordeal, and, consequently must know all about it, tell me—is there anything in my theory? Of course, in this exceedingly watery climate of ours, we must expect a constant succession of heavy downpours and short, sharp showers. But why should it always rain when mairiages are going on? Are not the principal actors sufficiently depressed already? But for the singularly inappropriate nature of the simile, one might say it was heaping coals of fire on their unfortunate heads. I will not go so far as to say that every marriage yet celebrated has taken place on a wet day-I can only confine myself to my own experience. We will say I have seen, or "assisted," at a dozen weddings-well, twelve of that dozen have come off in the rain. Next to the fainting, the tears, the sal volatile, and the other accompaniments at the altar, the scene at the church door is worthy the most attention. Have you ever watched the group of old a ladies in wonderful pattens and mysterious honnets, with noses red from the morning air, who congregate to see the procession?

It is quite a study. You never see a man there. I can only remember having seen a man present on an occasion of this sort once.

He was the very ghost of a man-his face ly of care and serrow, and although evidently not more than forty, there was a-liberal sprinkling of white in his hair. He was attired in clothes which would have been disdained by any scarcerow with an atom of self-respect, and altogether appeared thoroughly miserable and dejected. Approaching the church, he required of the females there assembled What was going on?" "A wedding," replied a dozen eager voices. The man turned away with an expression on his face in which contempt and sadness were strangely blended, and in a low, heart-broken tone, said-" I never saw but one wedding in
